Reconstruction of the XIX century house in Italy

The building of the XIX century in Chieti - a small town in the region of Abruzzo in Italy - renovated by Italian architect Rocco Valentini (http://www.roccovalentini.it/). Originally part of the premises it was residential, the other part is occupied by the mill. During the time the house was supplemented by annexes, and in the 80 years of the last century, they are actually deprived him of light and air. The aim of the project was the desire to breathe new life into the building by removing unnecessary structure.

Two old buildings, it was decided to link together using large insert, made of Corten-steel and glass. This form of modern dynamics added to the traditional architecture of the village of Abruzzo, and recalled the agricultural machines of the past. The uniting of the new checkpoint was located area with stairs.

The old walls are made of local sandstone, handmade bricks, having a warm yellow hue. Colors for the interior materials were selected on the basis of similarity to the rusty surface of the court, are: floors are covered with dark brown tiles and stair treads and communicating zone finished in mahogany.
