

A Wine Fountain in Italy

There's a fountain in an Italian town that now flows with wine instead of water 24/7. And you don't have to pay a single penny to drink it.

CUFF ROTKA NOVEMBER 16, 2016

1444
Views

According to Catherine Edwards' report in The Local, a town in Italy now has a fountain that dispenses wine instead of water 24/7. And you don't have to pay a penny to drink it.

Çeşme is located in Ortona, a town south of Rome in Italy, famous for its red Montepulciano wine grapes. People have been making wine in the region since the sixth century.

Visitors to the wine fountain at the Dora Sarchese vineyard near Ortana can drink as much as they like. This service was made possible through a collaboration with an organization promoting the popular pilgrimage route known as Cammino di San Tommaso, or the "Way of St. Thomas." The fountain itself is actually the work of the renowned Italian architect Rocco Valentini.

It may come as a surprise, but this fountain in Italy is not the only one in the world. There is also a wine fountain at another religious site in Spain.

Article Tags: fountain · Italy · wine · LIFE
Article Categories: CUFF

Related Articles